FLY FISHING

Mühlheimer Ark

The Mühlheimer Ark has a length of 3 km and is 17 km off the hotel. The Ark is “the” area within the Forstinger Route for dry fly fans. Here we find a rich stock of ladder-loving brown- and rainbow trout stocks that, with the right conditions, can be lured to the surface from spring to late autumn. Of course, the surface activity follows the hatching phases of the corresponding insects; outside of these times, nymphs fished in deep water promise more success.

The shores are partially densely overgrown and it is the bigger fish that feast under the overhanging branches. In order to bewitch them a solid casting technique and careful stalking technique is required. Unfortunately, anglers try over and over to compensate for their lacking casting ability by wading inconsiderately and scooting the trout, if at all possible, into a better location. Obviously, they are not enthusiastic about this.

In General, in my opinion there is too much wading that is too inconsiderate and too clumsy on the Ark. The Ark has such a headstrong stock of fish, that you can be 200 to 250 meters down river and spend the whole day in wonderful conversation – as long as you concentrate and fish carefully, and as long as no “marathon water” comes your way....
